The "Golden Lions" Division was the last of 66 U.S. infantry divisions to be activated during the war. The 106th had only just arrived in Europe and was placed in an exposed position on the front line in the Ardennes. When the attack began, the 14th Cavalry Group on its left withdrew and most of the division was surrounded. Only the 424th Regiment and elements of the 820th Tank Destroyer Battalion were able to escape as almost 7000 American soldiers were forced to surrender.
